SUNDAY SCHOOL CLOSES

Interesting Program at Ben Venue Li brary Sunday Afternoon. It was an interesting occasion, on a delightful Sunday afternoon, when Miss Colgate's Sunday school, sura rounded by a sympathetic company of parents and friends that quite filled the audience room of Ben Venue Library, gathered for the closing ses sion of the year. For three months they have faithfully given an hour each Sunday afternoon to a study of this comment as much as the second the Bible, under the guidance of their superintendent and her assistants. Misses Hope Colgate and Elizabeth Jennings.

In opening the exercises Miss Col gate told us that the purpose of this city markets from distances within a gathering was simply a rehearsal of the work which they had been engaged in during the summer, following this announcement by a neat little address which showed very plainly the delightful spirit which animated all. The school then sang the very appropriate Sunshine song, which was followed by a hymn, "Can a Little Child Like Me," and a responsive prayer service led by the superintendent. Master Thomas Foster was now called upon and recited the Beatitudes. showing not only that he knew them. but that they had a meaning for him Then Miss Hazel Douglass gave us that always touching 23d psalm in a sympathetic manner. She was followed by Miss Hazel Horst, who repeated the names of the books of the service tonight from 7.30 to 8.15. Bible in both Old Testament and New without getting lost among the minor prophets or the less familiar of the Epistles.

After this came the offertory ser vice, song and march to the inspiring strains of Onward Christian Soldier, and the treasurer's report, which was read by Miss Hubbel who told us that the monies gathered amounted to about 50 dollars, from which they had the 8.15 train. Funeral services were drawn, among other things, to bring two little sick folks from the city out into the country for a good vacation, beside contributing to state and county Sunday school work and there was still a good little balance in the treasury.

Recitations were again resumed and Master Raymond Douglass repeated the first psalm distinctly and well. and all 31 verses of the 14th chapter of the Gospel of John were recited in unison by Misses Evelyn Colgate and Esther Foster and Master Francis Douglass. Here a sweet little song was sung by the youngest children leased to go back to her parents, is The first words of which were: "Jesus once was a little child." This was play, "The Beast." Master Ray mond Douglass had been equally faithful for two summers and Miss Evelyt Colgate and Master Thomas Foster had not missed for three summers. Each received appropriate recognit ion, as did Miss Esther Foster whose record of attendance was perfect for five summers. GOOD STREET LIGHTING IN AMERICAN CITIES.

Development In America Has Been Marvelous In Past Quarter Century.

Around the world progressive Amer ican cities are noted especially for good street lighting. It is not the White Ways of the big cities that deserve and third eities, like Syracuse, Scranton, Rochester, Schenectady, Toleda and Denver, where street lighting is the lure which draws purchasers to the radius of more than 100 miles. Street lighting is the barometer of the -ity's growth-the more lighting you see the more you are certain that the city is booming. This expression is not original. It is the first test of a city's capacity for new population, new facto-by the capitalist. In the last twenty-five years the growth of street lighting in American cities has not been short of marvelous The strides in brightening up thriving municipalities today cannot be measured. The great electric companies are kept constantly on the move building power and light plants and installing extensive lighting systems throughout the country. City research reports of recent years all attest to the fact that the better lighted citles are getting the population and, what is most essential for healthy city growth, the business. Without the latter a city will not grow, and without modern street lighting investors of money are not attracted. Unless the streets are brightly and attractively lighted so that it is both pleasant and sufe to be on them at night people find no advantage in living in the city. City after city has demonstrated the fact that streets which are practically deserted after sundown can be entivened by the installation of attractive lighting. In any city only those streets which are well lighted are busy after dark. Only a block or two from the "great white way" in New York streets which, in comparison with Broadway, are dimly lighted are found nearly deserted, though great crowds are surging along New York's brightly ighted and celebrated thoroughfare. Good street lighting always pays in dollars and cents. Street lighting which is attractive at night and the equipment which makes a good appearance in the daytime makes a good impression. This good impression at tracts desirable business. It increases real estate values and puts new life In streets which would otherwise die at sunset. A well lighted city is always a clean city. The civic pride aroused by the well lighted streets prevents the necumulation of rubbish in the street The lights prompt men to "brush up" and keep their premises cleaner. Ornamental street lighting encourages the people living in the surrounding towns to come to the city for their amusements. It also attracts the attention of persons passing through the city and causes them to make favorable comments about the progressive ness of the city. These comments advertise a city as 'active" or "dyad," and on the reputation a city has in this respect depends the attraction of new industries and new citizens.

One other very important feature that adds to the city's welface is the safety that results from well lighted streets. The brighter the lights the less likelihood of theft and other crimes. The more lights a city burns the fewer policemen it needs and the amatler may be its police stations.

LIBERTY.

God grants liberty only to those who love it and are always ready to guard and defend it .- Daniel Webster.
